From its very founding in 1970, Earth Day has stood as a time for Americans to reflect on all that we owe to Mother Earth and the need to care for our fragile planet. Thus far, we've made great progress in cleaning up our nation's air and water, preserved farmland, forests, wetlands and wildlife habitats, and put our country on a path to a cleaner, safer environment.

However, we have greatly failed to meet the challenge to reduce the size of our population, which if allowed to continue to grow, will severely limit our ability to create a livable future for our children and grandchildren – and generations to come.

NPG has worked for decades to spread the alarm that too many people pose a huge threat to our nation socially, economically and especially environmentally. It is definitely time for more Americans to raise their voices on this issue and fight for the important goal to slow, halt, and eventually reverse population growth.
